7 次の英文を読んで各設問に答えなさい。

Have you ever seen dolphins in the sea? They look very friendly to you. They are very cute, so they will soon become your favorite animals. For a long time we did not know very much about dolphins, but today they are becoming familiar animals to us.

Dolphins live in the sea and look like fish, but ①they are not. Fish lay eggs, but dolphins have babies in the water. These babies drink their mothers' milk. Dolphins can stay under water for a long time, but they sometimes have to come up because they need air. When a mother dolphin has a baby, ②she has to carry it up before she does anything else.

Scientists are studying about dolphins' ways of communication. Some of them say that dolphins have "language" like us, but we do not know very much about that yet. We know that they use sounds for their communication. They send special sounds in the water. We cannot hear some of these sounds with our ears. They use the sounds ③to look for food in the dark water, too.

Scientists have found that dolphins are very clever and can understand our language. In 1950, when American scientists studied the sea around the United States, a dolphin helped them very much. His name was Tom and he was able to understand what they told him to do and carried food and other things from the ship to the people working in the sea. He stayed with the workers and saved them from sharks. Sharks are afraid of dolphins! Today people working in the sea like to have dolphins near them.

Now dolphins have ④a very big problem. The number of dolphins in the world is becoming smaller every year. They get sick and die because the sea is dirty. We are responsible for it. To save them, we have to make the sea clean.

(注) cute かわいい      familiar 親しみのある      lay (卵)を産む
shark サメ      dirty 汚い      be responsible for ~に責任がある

問5 下線部④の内容を日本語で説明しなさい。

8 次の英文を読んで各設問に答えなさい。

On Saturday morning in a small town, Emma Carter came out of a shoe shop with new shoes which were cheap, but Emma liked ①them very much. She was 73 years old and did not have much money. She began to walk home. She thought, "I can go for a walk in my new shoes."

It was a quiet town and there was nobody on the street. Suddenly, Emma heard something behind her. She did not have time to look because just then somebody ran up and snatched her bag. Emma fell down. Then she looked up, and saw a tall young man with long, brown hair. He stood and looked down at her; then he ran away with Emma's bag.

"Help!" Emma cried.

②But nobody came, and after two or three minutes Emma slowly got up and went to the nearest house. The people there were very kind. They gave Emma a cup of coffee, and soon an ambulance came and took her to the hospital.

At the hospital, doctor looked at Emma. "You are going to be O.K.," he said. "Just take it easy for a day. Can your husband help you at home?"

"My husband died eight years ago," said Emma. "There is only me at home."

"Well," the doctor said, "I think you must stay in hospital for tonight." Later, a policeman came to the hospital and Emma told him about the bag.

"Did anybody else see this man?" he asked.

"I don't know," said Emma. "But there was nobody on the street when I called for help."

"Oh," the policeman said. ( ③ )

"A little money - and a lottery ticket," said Emma. "I buy a ticket every Saturday. I always have the same number - 05, 12, 19, 23, 24, 38. All those numbers are important to me. I was born on 5th ( ④ ), 1923. I lived at number 24 Sandwich Road for 38 years..."

"Yes," said the policeman. "I understand." He wrote everything in a little black book. "Did you see the man's face?" he asked.

"Yes," said Emma. "I did. I fell down, and he looked down at me. So I saw his face."

"How was he?" asked the policeman. Emma said "He was tall and he had long brown hair. He ⑤(wear) blue trousers and a white shirt. He had brown eyes..."

"What color were his shoes?" asked the policeman.

Shoes! Suddenly Emma remembered her new shoes. Where were they? She told the policeman about her shoes, ⑥but then she began to cry and could not stop.

A nurse came up to Emma's bed. "Please go now," she said to the policeman. "Mrs. Carter needs to sleep."
